Identifying patterns of behavior

These light curves are reasonably unordered, but is there a discernible pattern hidden in the data?

For example, what if we were to order them according to their "final" off transition?

The distribution of off times has a very clear pattern. This is aggregate behavior of the population as measured via observations "from a distance" as opposed to survey (or obtrusive forms of monitoring) methodology.

Question:

are people creatures of habit?